CERTIFICATION: PME, E-IMET

Globally, violent conflict, war, human rights violations, and generalized violence are among the major drivers of forced displacement. The Managing Forced Displacement course aims to increase the capacity of security sector actors who are obligated to manage complex state security and human security challenges that drive, amplify, and are shaped by conflict-induced forced displacement.

OBJECTIVES

Upon completion of this course, participants will be able to:

- ◆ Uncover best-practice responses for the protection, management, and treatment of forcibly displaced populations.
- ◆ Examine how irregular forced displacement crises provide a foothold for transnational criminal organizations and illicit actors to make gains.
- ◆ Achieve an understanding of the roles and responsibilities of response communities in migration and displacement crises.
- ◆ Identify implications of international protection standards on state security concerns during displacement crises.
- ◆ Explore civil-military coordination as a tool for improved response.

TOPICS

The delivery format combines lectures, discussions, experiential scenarios, practical small-group activities, case studies, and multimedia aids. Course topics may include:

- ◆ Armed forces' responsibilities vis-à-vis displacement
- ◆ Armed non-state actors, transnational criminal organizations, and forced displacement.
- ◆ Challenges, concerns, and best practices for the military-humanitarian relationship
- ◆ Displacement concepts and legal frameworks
- ◆ Countering human smuggling and trafficking in persons and protecting forcibly displaced populations from force, fraud, and coercion
- ◆ Impact of conflict-induced displacement on men, women, boys, and girls
- ◆ Four common socio-political responses to large-scale, conflict-induced, and irregular movements of people

Host governments in consultation with U.S. Embassies are asked to source participants from mid- to senior-level military officers and their civilian equivalents, as well as representatives from civil society, non-governmental, and international multilateral organizations.
